Only Court Orders can be enforced by the police or the courts. Police will accept official stamped orders, not endorsements. In some instances, police will only enforce the Order if they are specifically designated in the Order to do so. This agreement is not legally enforceable

- Where there is no determination of Decision-Making Responsibility, the Centre requests that the lawyers or the parties provide written confirmation that includes the following wording: "without prejudice 'someone' has interim Decision-Making Responsibility" or "without prejudice the person agrees that the child lives with one parent and the other parent agrees to Supervised Parenting Time until the time when Decision-Making Responsibility is decided."

If CAS is involved: The Centre obtains a Family Court Order (NOT a written agreement) that clarifies Decision-Making Responsibility and Parenting Time arrangements before agreeing to provide service
